LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Members and Friends:

I want to thank all of you for your support, interest, and involvement in everything the Arizona Historical Society has to offer. A special "thank you" goes to all who supported our efforts to encourage the Arizona Legislature to reauthorize the Arizona Historical Society for ten years, the maximum term allowed under Arizona law. It is a privilege to serve as President of an organization with such devoted and informed members and friends.

Last year, I wrote in this report about the need to confront the economic realities of the day regarding limits on public financial support and increased competition for fewer private-donor resources. Over the past year, the Arizona Historical Society has prioritized its efforts in these directions. Following analysis and discussion of economic trends and agency performance (from both historic and projected standpoints), this past summer the State Board of Directors created a committee to formulate a "business plan" charting the Society's next five years of operation. The committee consists of an equal number of board and staff participants. Among its tasks is the establishment of revenue-generating and fundraising priorities, programs, and goals. The formalization and adoption of this business plan, with revenue goals and agreed-upon priorities, will guide our agency in its day-to-day decision-making and in its productive use of existing resources. The economic sustainability of our programs and facilities, both short-term and long-term, will be enhanced.

In order to maximize efficiencies and better utilize its resources, the Arizona Historical Society continues to collaborate with other agencies and organizations across the state. For example, Riordan Mansion State Historic Park in Flagstaff, operated by AHS in partnership with Arizona State Parks, is open and doing vibrant business. In southern Arizona, AHS collaborates with the Ben's Bells Project—a nonprofit agency—to preserve and revitalize Tucson's Charles O. Brown house, one of the area's oldest surviving adobe structures. In Yuma, we continue to make progress on implementing the Yuma Museum Campus Plan, in conjunction with the City of Yuma, Yuma Crossing National Heritage Area, and the Yuma County Historical Society. This past year saw the opening of space in Yuma's Heritage Library for AHS-Rio Colorado's newly conserved historical archives, a collaborative effort between the Arizona Historical Society, the Yuma County Library District, and the Yuma County Historical Society.

The Arizona Historical Society's efforts at collaboration and maximization of resources extend to programming and exhibits. The business plan being worked on by the Board of Directors and staff will build on, and expand, the Arizona Historical Society's collaborative efforts with other museums as well as with public and private entities of all kinds.

As the foregoing demonstrates, the Arizona Historical Society has prioritized its efforts toward long-term economic sustainability. We welcome your continuing interest, support, and participation in all of the Arizona Historical Society's activities.

Many thanks and regards

President, AHS Board of Directors

AHS revenues increased slightly (less than one percent) from fiscal year 2012-13 to fiscal year 2013-14. This was primarily due to appropriations increasing to offset increases in employee-related expenses. Donations and earned income both decreased slightly, but were offset by increased grants and miscellaneous revenues.

AHS expenditures increased by 4.5% over the previous fiscal year, even as salaries and utilities showed small decreases. The single greatest contributor was operations, which increased due to repairs, maintenance, and improvements made to AHS facilities.

LETTER FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Dear Friends:

Throughout the Arizona Historical Society's sesquicentennial year, I have been reminded how highly personal is history. History is biography and autobiography; history is our story as an individual or a group, as a community, a state, or a nation. As a species, we humans are compulsive about documenting our lives, as evidenced by archives of all kinds—the letters, diaries, and photographs we keep—and the objects we collect. In this technological age, it is no accident that smart phones include camera and video settings, which grow ever more sophisticated with each improved generation. No experience, whether celebratory or tragic, no backyard family gathering or vacation, no sports event or concert, or merely hiking with the family dog, seems to lack some sort of photo documentation. We are our planet's ultimate chroniclers. The means of delivery may have changed over the millennia, from unwritten narratives handed down by word of mouth, to epics sung by jongleurs, to the written word presented on clay tablets, papyrus, parchment, paper, and now electronically, in all its sometimes undisciplined formats, but at heart we remain storytellers. The story, whatever form it takes, is fundamental to how we view the world in which we live.

The Arizona Historical Society serves as the keeper of stories, both intimate and panoramic. Through its museum facilities, AHS provides the physical conduit by which anyone, regardless of background, can discover his or her own history alongside the histories of other individuals, familiar and unfamiliar. Its archival and artifact collections preserve the documents and objects that illuminate the history of Arizona and the West. Its various public programs afford the opportunity to participate in a learning experience. If an on-site visit is difficult or impossible, the journey of discovery can begin on-line.

A perfect place to start is at the AHS Sanguinetti House Museum and Gardens, where visitors will observe how the personal story of a single individual unfolds into a broader understanding of the evolution of modern Yuma. Once the home of entrepreneur E. F. Sanguinetti (1867-1945), and donated by his descendants to the Arizona Historical Society, the museum introduces patrons to the Victorian-era home of a successful businessman and community leader. The so-called "territorial office" tweaks the imagination with images of local merchants making deals that shaped the community. We can imagine tea being served in the parlor. The sound of the railroad whistle in a changing gallery sharpens our senses to the hustle and bustle of Madison Avenue, Yuma's main thoroughfare, and reminds us of the community's vibrant heyday as a transportation crossroads. As we move into the Italian-inspired formal gardens, filled with exotic flowers that Sanguinetti imported and loved, we turn our backs on the surrounding desert and enter a lush environment that is as inviting today as it must have been during Sanguinetti's lifetime. Refreshed from their on-site history tour, visitors can explore Yuma's rich past in the archival and historic photograph collections available at the nearby Heritage Library. These collections are accessible to anyone, anywhere, through the AHS on-line catalog.

Similar experiences await audiences, from near and far, at Arizona Historical Society museums in Flagstaff, Tempe, and Tucson. Curious visitors and researchers need only scroll through the AHS website (Arizona Historical Society.org) to discover the broad content and exciting variety of programs, activities, special events, and services available through the Arizona Historical Society.

The Arizona Historical Society's 150th birthday milestone deserves special recognition. A century and a half after its enactment by the Territorial Legislature in 1864, AHS is vital and thriving. After pondering how best to mark this special year, we decided to produce an anniversary edition of The Journal of Arizona History. Compiled and written by staff from across the Society's divisions and departments, "AHS at 150" highlights emblematic objects in our collections—the dramatic and the mundane, the significant and the modest—all of which reflect the "real people, real stories" that are at the heart of AHS's mission. Many of these artifacts are on special display at AHS museums around the state.

We thank you, the members and friends of the Arizona Historical Society, for traveling with us, marking our passage through every twist and turn of our state's history, and joining us as we tackle the future.

With warm regards,
